

Tejas Shah

ENGL 1010

Cris Longhurst

4/18/14

English 1010 Reflection

So, readers, there was two assignment choices for me to choose which one should I write a reflection on, and which would you think I choose? The one with a perfect score or a one with a few errors? Some would choose the assignment perfect score, some would choose the assignment with a few errors. If you chose the one with a few errors, you were right. That assignment is... wait for it... the group annotated bibliography assignment. I chose this assignment over the group summary assignment, which was the perfect score, because I could learn from those errors.

I kind of knew how to write a summary, but I have never learned how to write a bibliography until now, and I learned it through the Writing Center and from my group. Also, I would not learn anything from a perfect score because I would feel like there is nothing new to learn. What this assignment showed me was how to know if the reader was credible or not. It also helped me answer a few questions I would have for the authors. It made me enjoy English, mostly this class, more.

This assignment will help me in the future when I pass English 1010 because I now know how whether to trust the author or not. I am sure this assignment will help out a lot in English 2000-3000 class. This assignment could also help me with my life experiences because I can learn if I can trust a character as a credible source for a subject. This assignment did something I did not think was possible. I enjoyed being in a group, particularly this group, because I knew I could help them out, and they could help me out too if I needed it.